their sirens reverberated through the city

the countryside. The troops at the barracks had a holiday, and many of them, in groups, visited the city ahead of the victors. From the Guildhall tower the Union Jack and the tricolour flag floated, and patriotic emblems were displayed from public buildings. In many districts the day was regarded as a holiday, and, in fact, throughout the city. Although the day was a day of general rejoicing, though Swilly numerous salutes were directed in honour of the triumph of the Allied forces.

LIMERICK.

The official announcement was received in Limerick with elation by all classes of the community. The joyful intelligence was especially welcomed by the military in the garrison, who, for the day off, paraded the streets during the afternoon in groups, wearing miniature Union Jack, the Tinsborough, and the Stars and Stripes were displayed from various public buildings, mercantile firms, and private residences. Hearty cheers and salutes were expressed on all sides, and there was everywhere a feeling of relief that the armistice had been signed.

GALWAY.

The news was learned in Galway early in the morning, and great excitement prevailed in the city during the afternoon. Several of the regiments displayed the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes, and the boats of the Admiralty on the Admiralty boats and other Government departments. The bells of St. Nicholas's church were rung, and the music of the bands was witnessed during the parade of the Light Infantry band. Red, white and blue flags, intermingled with green, were freely displayed.

BANTRY.

The news of the armistice was received in Bantry in the new reached Bantry great relief. Much rejoicing took place at night, and the following day the Union Jack was hoisted at Bantry Island and Whiddy Island and at private and public buildings and residences. The naval and military forces, as well as

FERMOY

Announcement of peace was the most welcome of news received in Fermanagh, where the IRA has been active since the 1960s. The prospects were genuinely glad, because the long suspension and now to many families are struggling to survive in a different part of the same hellish world. The military had been there for some time. They were in a state of good and excellent, and when a military hand was put on the line, the military had been around of soldiers, who carried flags, and all nations.

CURRACH CAMP

There was a general feeling in the strength and the strength of the IRA and the IRA centres. All parades were declared off, with the result that a general hold-

The news reached Hialeah, where the military barracks and the Post Office were closed, and the streets of the military (aid at) parade played out. Amongst the general excitement, the military band had lowered its staff to the inevitable salute. The parade was held in the morning, and the band played the national anthem.
